- I watched your video with interest as the thumb-nail is a click bait one. You have become the mouthpiece of Dr. Raghuram Rajan, the eternal pessimist and a virulent critic of the present government, after he could not get his extension as RBI Governor for the second time. You have compared China's growth with India, as belittling as speed of the goods train. You have selectively cut and pasted the interviews and news items of many of the hallowed persons. I need to answer your slurry. In 70's, USA with her President Nixon and the Aide Henry Kissinger embarked to China who they have considered

China as a possible ally to break the hold of USSR from the world order. The MNCs looking for instant profit fell into the trap of Mao Ze Dong and opened their manufacturing bases. In business there is no Capitalism or Communism, only the haves and have-nots. The great Steve Jobs visited India and he chose China over India. Elon Musk started his Tesla in Shanghai with a clear understanding that the technology transfer is for Chinese only. They as usual, stripped his technology and made BYD as the arch rival to Tesla. He has not flown his Space X from China. You are comparing Vietnamese speed of getting the relocated projects from China. The Chinese Barons who run away with their money moved to Vietnam along with their Companies, they hold. Ratan Tata himself had said that when Tata Nano wanted to shift their project from Singur, Bengal to Sanand Gujarat in 2008, the then Chief Minister Modi met him on the land allocated to Nano Project with red carpet. That type of instant decisions are possible, though it cannot be a rule. Make in India may not be grand success as many variables have chipped in after the announcement of that Program. Covid, Slow-down of world economy, Constant bickering at the border with the neighbouring countries exacerbated by anti-Indian activity by the so-called Leftists and Intellectuals to cite a few. Even with all the shortcomings it is taking shape. Even for a totalitarian country like China, it has taken many decades with a lot of help from USA. You can follow the link https://www.pppinindia.gov.in/list_of_all_ppp_projects where as many as 1583 projects with an outlay of nearly Rs.25 lakh crores been invested. Many projects may be under Make in India scheme. India, time immemorial is an Agriculture based economy like China. When the transition came China, due to its stroke of luck became a manufacturing economy. India straightway became a service economy thanks to technological boom in the West and more English-speaking employees available in our Country. Now we are taking a step backward to integrate manufacturing into services with lot of hiccups. Two or three decades is merely a blip in a country's growth. I expect a pat for the development of our country showing the highlights of various achievements. Every goal always be not perfect. Graphs and Histograms do not reveal the true nature of economy. I absolutely agree with you. As a former investor in India, I know India's problem is systemic. While China is the only country that is able to reduce bureaucratic regulatory overload, India kept increasing it. China actually reduces the size of public/government services, India still have a problem with it. BJP or Congress will not amount to anything without addressing bureaucratic overload.

This is a personal experience for my company. After 8 years, we finally managed to get all the regulatory approvals to build our factory but our Vietnamese plant already operated for 6 years despite the same investment time. Finally, we just opted out of India, as we know there are more regulatory roadblocks down the road.

- The "Make in India" initiative, launched with the aim of turning India into a global manufacturing hub, has faced numerous significant challenges and is widely seen as having fallen short of its ambitious goals. Below are various ways in which the initiative has struggled, with many viewing it as more of a political slogan than a functional strategy.

1. Unrealistic Manufacturing Targets

Initial Target: The initiative aimed to increase the manufacturing sector's share of GDP to 25% by 2022 from about 16% in 2014.

Outcome: As of recent years, the manufacturing sector has barely crossed the 17% mark, far short of the target. With a lack of structural reforms and coherent planning, this goal was likely unachievable from the start.

2. Lack of Infrastructure Development

Challenge: Manufacturing requires strong infrastructure, including reliable power, transport, and logistics networks.

Reality: Infrastructure bottlenecks have persisted, with delayed projects, inadequate facilities, and power supply issues that drive up costs and make Indian manufacturing less competitive globally. For instance, logistics costs in India are about 14% of GDP, much higher than global benchmarks of 8-9%.

3. Complex Regulatory Environment

Bureaucratic Red Tape: Although the government promoted "ease of doing business," many regulatory processes remained complex, lengthy, and inconsistent.

Lack of Reforms: Essential reforms needed to streamline business approvals, land acquisition, and labor laws were either delayed or implemented in a way that was insufficient to attract major foreign investment.

4. Failure to Attract Foreign Direct Investment (FDI) in Manufacturing

High Expectations: The initiative hoped to bring in significant foreign direct investment (FDI) to boost manufacturing.

Shortfall: While FDI has increased in service sectors, manufacturing FDI has lagged due to concerns about poor infrastructure, regulatory unpredictability, and high labor costs. Many international companies chose countries like Vietnam and Bangladesh over India due to more favorable conditions.

5. Lack of Skill Development

Issue: The "Make in India" initiative required a skilled workforce capable of meeting the demands of advanced manufacturing.

Outcome: India's vocational training and skill development programs have not been able to keep pace with industry demands. This has resulted in a skills gap, forcing companies to either compromise on quality or look elsewhere.

6. Dependence on Imports

Challenge: To manufacture goods domestically, the Indian industry needs access to quality raw materials and components.

Reality: India has continued to rely heavily on imports for critical raw materials, machinery, and components, especially from China, undercutting the core aim of the initiative to reduce imports and increase self-sufficiency.

7. Inadequate Support for Small and Medium Enterprises (SMEs)

Role of SMEs: SMEs are critical to any manufacturing ecosystem, but many Indian SMEs lack access to credit, technology, and infrastructure.

Result: Without adequate support and funding, SMEs have struggled to contribute meaningfully to the "Make in India" mission. Bureaucratic hurdles and delayed payments further exacerbate their problems, leading to high mortality rates among SMEs.

8. High Operating Costs and Lack of Competitive Edge

Operating Costs: Energy, labor, and logistics costs in India are significantly higher compared to countries like China and Vietnam, making Indian goods less competitive.

Result: Indian manufacturing struggles to compete on the global stage, with "Make in India" unable to address the core cost and efficiency issues that deter international buyers.

9. Limited Success in Job Creation

Goal: The initiative intended to create millions of new jobs, especially in manufacturing.

Reality: Job creation has remained weak, with a limited increase in manufacturing jobs and a large portion of employment still concentrated in the informal sector. This failure is a direct consequence of the slow growth of manufacturing and structural issues in job-intensive sectors.

10. COVID-19 and Global Supply Chain Challenges

Impact: The pandemic disrupted global supply chains, impacting production and investment flows worldwide.

Outcome: The "Make in India" initiative's slow progress left India less prepared to pivot quickly during these disruptions, and the country lost additional ground to competitors in terms of manufacturing resilience.

11. Perception as a Political Slogan

Criticism: Many have argued that "Make in India" was more of a political slogan than a well-thought-out policy, designed primarily to appeal to voters.

Result: Without substantial policy support or systemic reforms to back it up, the initiative has seen limited results, leading to skepticism about its true intent and effectiveness.

Conclusion

The "Make in India" initiative's failures stem from a mix of ambitious but unrealistic targets, a complex business environment, and a lack of deep-rooted reforms in infrastructure, labor, and skill development. These factors have kept India's manufacturing sector from realizing its potential, and until structural changes are made, the initiative may remain more a symbol of aspiration than actual progress.

 - Modis chamchas and influencers are living in illusion and make tall hallow claims. Vietnam, cambodia ,Thailand ,Malaysia and even Bangladesh are maximum exports in textile sector, and massive exports from China cannot be beaten.

At 10:00 , The narrator (Ganesh) makes a very good point. I'm in the manufacturing field. And our staff only has 2 skilled people, the rest are unskilled. The unskilled people have a massive willingness to work. And the amount of help, rather a small financial support in the form of a salary to the unskilled people is a massive change for them in their lives.

Infact many of my unskilled staff, are using zomato and swiggy to order food. Since we mentioned it to them. They say it's a less burden for them to just not cook once in a day.

I'm just giving an example as to how the quality of life has improved for the unskilled in just a small way.

Replies:

- Is is easier for you to provide one time food as a part of compensation like have a small canteen in office? Just asking if this is possible without impacting your overall financials significantly
- @ShubhamTiwari-mu8do Yes, we can do that. But it would make sense financially or feasible for me if I have more than 10 staff. But I have lower than 10. Generally, manufacturing is all depending on the owner. If they want to give food, they can. They can get experienced workers for a salary range of 5-6k, so you can add lunch provisions, bus passes or van services,whatever suits your requirement financially, basically. But the main thing of manufacturing, is well basically sale of the product your making.

 - China's emergence as the "world's factory" is commonly traced back to the late 1990s and early 2000s, particularly following its accession to the World Trade Organization (WTO) in 2001. China took only about 20 years to become the world's factory. At that time, China faced competition from Southeast Asia and, of course, constant competition from India.

- They did not leverage their great position so china overtook them. So it was in a good position but inaction cost it dearly. And it continues this trend still.

For example in 2021 both India and china had record gdp growth:

India 9.69%+

China 18.7%+

Something in Indian leadership is massively failing and asking for pity will only worsen the issue.

Keep fighting, yes, but do not misrepresent history to make the people that plunder/damage India look better.

Also I believe it is too late to put economic growth as a number one priority. Climate change is a fast approaching world spanning disaster and India is the largest polluter with some of the least spending in sustainability.

The whole world will need to come together and stop pollution and at the current rate India is around 20-40 years behind global efforts and will probably be held accountable if it is the only large polluter with a focus on economic growth.

Also pollution/climate change will hurt Indians earlier than other countries which just adds to increase the pressure.

Why not consider stepping into politics and leading by example, rather than just making videos? It seems like your current approach prioritizes views over meaningful contributions. By focusing on negativity towards our nation and leaders like Modi, you risk undermining the very spirit of our society. Instead of spreading divisive rhetoric, think about how you could use your platform to inspire constructive dialogue and drive real change. There's a significant opportunity here to uplift and unite people, rather than create division. Your influence could truly be a force for progress—why not channel it into something greater?

Everything is so relatable. We were planning to setup a manufacturing plant in Wada maharashtra. However, Every process was so painful. First find a land, then make sure its not disputed. For making it non agricultural Land get clearance from many many authorities. Everyone had their prices. So if you buy 5 acres land, it will cost around 50 to 60 lakhs for their clearances alone. Even after all this you have to go so many places get so many signatures approvals etc. This takes around 2 years to only get the NA. Then u start your factory setup getting machines and everything, by the time we start the factory it takes upto 3 to 4 long years MINIMUM. so whatever you invest you have lost that much in interest alone. Before you start the factory you are in major losses. How do you even sustain that. Also, I your land is claimed by an adivasi after such painstakingly long process you have to vacate it. WOW! - The construction of Tesla's Gigafactory Shanghai is regarded as a modern industrial marvel due to its rapid building pace and efficient timeline. Here is a timeline of the factory's construction process:

1. Early 2018: Tesla's Plans for a Factory in China

To expand production in the world's largest electric vehicle market, China, Tesla began considering a factory in the country in early 2018, choosing Shanghai as the ideal location.

2. July 2018: Investment Agreement Signed

Tesla signed a cooperation agreement with the Shanghai government, planning to invest $2 billion to build the Shanghai Gigafactory, aiming to produce electric vehicles to meet Chinese market demand. Elon Musk indicated that the factory would integrate manufacturing, battery production, and R&D.

3. October 2018: Land Acquisition

In October 2018, Tesla successfully secured 860 acres of industrial land in the Lingang area of Shanghai through a public bidding process, initiating the planning of the factory layout.

4. December 2018: Factory Design Completed

Preliminary design plans for the factory were completed by late 2018, setting the foundation for the upcoming construction work. These plans included key production areas, such as workshops and battery assembly lines.

5. January 2019: Official Groundbreaking

On January 7, 2019, Tesla's Shanghai Gigafactory officially broke ground, becoming the first large-scale automobile manufacturing project fully owned by a foreign company in China. Construction moved rapidly, with the foundation and main building completed in just a few months.

6. August 2019: Factory Structure Completed

By August 2019, the main factory structure was completed, and the installation of equipment and interior finishing began. Tesla adopted a modular construction method, greatly reducing the construction timeline.

7. October 2019: Completion and Test Production Begins

In October 2019, the factory was completed, and equipment was tested. The first trial-production vehicles rolled off the line, validating the smoothness of production processes and quality control.

8. December 2019: Official Production

On December 30, 2019, Tesla's Shanghai Gigafactory officially began production of the Model 3, with the first orders for the Chinese market delivered within weeks. At this time, the factory's design capacity was 150,000 vehicles per year, which was gradually expanded to meet growing demand.

9. 2020: Further Expansion

In 2020, Tesla began the Gigafactory's expansion project to increase production for the Model Y. With this expansion, the factory's annual capacity increased further, making it a crucial production base for Tesla in the Asian market.

From agreement signing to production, Tesla's Shanghai Gigafactory was completed in just over a year.

The "Make in India" initiative, launched with the aim of turning India into a global manufacturing hub, has faced numerous significant challenges and is widely seen as having fallen short of its ambitious goals. Below are various ways in which the initiative has struggled, with many viewing it as more of a political slogan than a functional strategy.

1. Unrealistic Manufacturing Targets

Initial Target: The initiative aimed to increase the manufacturing sector's share of GDP to 25% by 2022 from about 16% in 2014.

Outcome: As of recent years, the manufacturing sector has barely crossed the 17% mark, far short of the target. With a lack of structural reforms and coherent planning, this goal was likely unachievable from the start.

2. Lack of Infrastructure Development

Challenge: Manufacturing requires strong infrastructure, including reliable power, transport, and logistics networks.

Reality: Infrastructure bottlenecks have persisted, with delayed projects, inadequate facilities, and power supply issues that drive up costs and make Indian manufacturing less competitive globally. For instance, logistics costs in India are about 14% of GDP, much higher than global benchmarks of 8-9%.

3. Complex Regulatory Environment

Bureaucratic Red Tape: Although the government promoted "ease of doing business," many regulatory processes remained complex, lengthy, and inconsistent.

Lack of Reforms: Essential reforms needed to streamline business approvals, land acquisition, and labor laws were either delayed or implemented in a way that was insufficient to attract major foreign investment.

4. Failure to Attract Foreign Direct Investment (FDI) in Manufacturing

High Expectations: The initiative hoped to bring in significant foreign direct investment (FDI) to boost manufacturing.

Shortfall: While FDI has increased in service sectors, manufacturing FDI has lagged due to concerns about poor infrastructure, regulatory unpredictability, and high labor costs. Many international companies chose countries like Vietnam and Bangladesh over India due to more favorable conditions.

5. Lack of Skill Development

Issue: The "Make in India" initiative required a skilled workforce capable of meeting the demands of advanced manufacturing.

Outcome: India's vocational training and skill development programs have not been able to keep pace with industry demands. This has resulted in a skills gap, forcing companies to either compromise on quality or look elsewhere.

6. Dependence on Imports

Challenge: To manufacture goods domestically, the Indian industry needs access to quality raw materials and components.

Reality: India has continued to rely heavily on imports for critical raw materials, machinery, and components, especially from China, undercutting the core aim of the initiative to reduce imports and increase self-sufficiency.

7. Inadequate Support for Small and Medium Enterprises (SMEs)

Role of SMEs: SMEs are critical to any manufacturing ecosystem, but many Indian SMEs lack access to credit, technology, and infrastructure.

Result: Without adequate support and funding, SMEs have struggled to contribute meaningfully to the "Make in India" mission. Bureaucratic hurdles and delayed payments further exacerbate their problems, leading to high mortality rates among SMEs.

8. High Operating Costs and Lack of Competitive Edge

Operating Costs: Energy, labor, and logistics costs in India are significantly higher compared to countries like China and Vietnam, making Indian goods less competitive.

Result: Indian manufacturing struggles to compete on the global stage, with "Make in India" unable to address the core cost and efficiency issues that deter international buyers.

9. Limited Success in Job Creation

Goal: The initiative intended to create millions of new jobs, especially in manufacturing.

Reality: Job creation has remained weak, with a limited increase in manufacturing jobs and a large portion of employment still concentrated in the informal sector. This failure is a direct consequence of the slow growth of manufacturing and structural issues in job-intensive sectors.

10. COVID-19 and Global Supply Chain Challenges

Impact: The pandemic disrupted global supply chains, impacting production and investment flows worldwide.

Outcome: The "Make in India" initiative's slow progress left India less prepared to pivot quickly during these disruptions, and the country lost additional ground to competitors in terms of manufacturing resilience.

11. Perception as a Political Slogan

Criticism: Many have argued that "Make in India" was more of a political slogan than a well-thought-out policy, designed primarily to appeal to voters.

Result: Without substantial policy support or systemic reforms to back it up, the initiative has seen limited results, leading to skepticism about its true intent and effectiveness.

Conclusion

The "Make in India" initiative's failures stem from a mix of ambitious but unrealistic targets, a complex business environment, and a lack of deep-rooted reforms in infrastructure, labor, and skill development. These factors have kept India's manufacturing sector from realizing its potential, and until structural changes are made, the initiative may remain more a symbol of aspiration than actual progress.

here is the solution for land acquisition in india

- central government should buy and acquire land in every district in advance for potential business to a such extent that even a steel plant can be setup in every states district
- by doing this there will be no motive for political ,enviromental concerns at a specific time when a potential corporate buyer wants to buy a land because these issues would have already been resolved .

Shubhas Sarkar (Ministry of Education) reply to Rajya shabha on 26/07/23.

At present there are 23 IIT and 20 IIM, no new IIT or IIM has been open in last 5 years.

IITs after 2014 - Palakkad, Tirupati, Bhilai, Dharwad, Jammu and Goa.

IIMs after 2014- Amritsar, Bodhgaya, Nagpur, Sambhalpur, Sirmour, Vishakapatnam, Jammu

All of above IITs and IIM are still NOT COMPLETE and its underfunded !.

Lets Talk about AIIMS -->

The idea for more AIIMS-like institutions was conceived by the Narendra Modi-government soon after it came to power in 2014. But not a single one of these is 'fully functional' till date. This was revealed by health minister Mandaviya himself in a parliamentary reply given in the ongoing Budget session.

Before 10 years india could not make ammunition for our own weapons but we could send spacecraft to space and not because we are not capable, it is because of the earlier govt not taking interest in the 60 years of their rule. Believe in next 10 years India's defence production would be enough to change all the import export bill. Benefits of the current spending on infra will be seen in long term. And today tata is going to produce AN 295 aircrafts in India which is going to be a game changer. So it requires some time to see the benefits of the policy when we compare instabilities all across the world.

- When an Indian talks, it is best to take their words with a pinch of salt. For example,
 - 1) Modi claimed in late 2019 that India is open defecation free and what happened? A recent joint monitoring programme (JMP) on water, sanitation and hygiene by the World Health Organization and UNICEF released July 1, 2021 stated that at least 15 per cent of the total population in India defecates in the open.
 - 2) "Know your meme: India superpower by 2020". They claimed in year 1998 that they will be superpower by 2020 or earlier? What happened today? GDP per capita not even 3k? Is that a definition of a superpower?
 - 3) India claimed to have landed on the "South Pole" of the Moon. What happened? Two out of the best 3 space agencies of the World (Russia/USA/China) said India did not land on Moon's South Pole.
 - 3A) NASA specifically said "The Chandrayaan-3 landing site is located about 600 kilometers from the Moon's South Pole.". This is just another diplomatic way of saying India did not land on Moon's South Pole. If India had landed on on Moon's South Pole, NASA would have simply said that "The Chandrayaan-3 landing site is located at the Moon's South Pole" instead of "The Chandrayaan-3 landing site is located about 600 KILOMETERS FROM the Moon's South Pole.
 - 3B) Dr Ouyang Ziyuan, lauded as the father of China's lunar exploration programme, told the Chinese-language Science Times newspaper that the Chandrayaan-3 landing site, at 69 degrees south latitude, was nowhere close to the pole, defined as between 88.5 and 90 degrees.
 - 4) Indians claimed that Modi is the "most popular Prime Minister/leader of the entire world" ages ago before the most recent election of 2024 took place. What happened? He barely won. Under India's electoral system, the party or alliance that wins more than 272 seats in the 543-member parliament can form a government. Opposition parties including the Indian National Congress won 235 seats. Modi merely won 238 seats. (ASTHA RAJVANSHI TIME). If you are the "most popular Prime Minister/leader of the entire world", you should be having a landslide victory in your country's election?

5) India claimed in year 2010 that they will send Astronauts into space by year 2015 - 2016? What happened 14 years later after the comment was made? Not even one single Indian Astronaut was sent into space. "The Indian Space Research Organization is planning to send astronauts to space before the year 2015-16, deputy project director of ISRO's Chandrayaan Mission Jaswinder Singh Khoral said in Chandigarh on Thursday. (Times of India)." This is the statement made by India in year 2010.

6) Indians said that they are the "Global leader of technology" but what technology are they leading and where are their sources and tangible products to back up what they have claimed? Nothing?

7) Indians like to talk extremely big about their Indian CEOs but what is their Indian CEOs on the Global Stage? In the ranking list of "Fortune 500 companies" or "Forbes Global 2000 companies", representing the World's richest/biggest companies, where does India stands? India has merely 55 companies in Forbes Global 2000 companies" and all are not even top 10, not even top 20, not even top 30, not even top 40 but only ranked top 45 (Reliance Industries)? Meanwhile, another similar country in terms of population, China, has 3 of their companies in the top 10 ranking of "Forbes Global 2000 companies" and has 346 companies instead of only 55 companies in that same ranking list? What about India's ranking in "Fortune 500 companies"? India has not even 10 companies in that list and China has 143 companies out of the list of 500 (hence is called Fortune 500).

8) Indians say that there are no caste system in India? But what are "caste related violence" and why is it still happening? What are the Musahar people and what are their dietary? Has democracy ever had a caste system? No, but only India's version of democracy.

9) India claimed to be the "Voice/Leader" of the Global South Countries but has every country of the "Global South Countries" ever elected a "Voice or Leader" for them? No. If India is the "Voice/Leader" of the Global South Countries, why is it that Maldives, a member country of the Global South Country, wanted "India out"?

10) Indian claimed to be the "World's Fastest Growing Economy" but

Year 1962 India's GDP = 42.16 billion (almost similar GDP to China)

Year 1962 China's GDP = 47.21 billion (almost similar GDP to India)

Year 2022 India's GDP = 3.42 trillion

Year 2022 China's GDP = 17.96 trillion

State Bank of India

The Banker To Every Indian

- Oct 23
- Okay let's go back to 2014 and live there
- Do you even know how many startups fail every year? Unemployment is at its all time high and so is the income inequality. You either love this govt if you're rich or brainwashed into thinking BJP = Religion
- I support congress more, but I agree with your statement.

I give credit where it's due. And this party has indeed worked a lot on improving this country's defence, economy, public infrastructure, and startup ecosystem. They are by no means perfect, but they have put some genuine effort which hardly a few have put in the past.

For better or worse, they have also increased the communal divide in the country. I understand the vote politics, every party does that. But this one genuinely worried me for some time. There is a point to be made that perhaps India was always communally divided and the majority Hindus (even though majority) were unfairly treated by giving special concessions to other groups, the likes of which are hardly seen in any other country. There is indeed some truth to that, and necessary steps were to be taken to reduce that, but what we instead have is communal divide and some unrest.

I would say what this country ideally needs is the current BJP government in the centre, and a strong opposition, which is supportive in good decisions (for the nation and not just any one community), and raises its voice against the bad decisions. For every digital India scheme, there was also a demonetization. This happened because of a clueless and weak opposition. The current opposition is definitely not a great candidate for the central government, but they need to be made strong enough to be a capable opposition.

If BSP hadn't initiated startup-friendly policies, where would the groundwork be? As for the textile industry, that's a traditional sector, rooted in India's past. We're talking about modern startups driven by tech, innovation, and digital transformation—fields that thrive in an ecosystem of forward-thinking policies. Conflating them shows a lack of understanding of what startup culture actually entails.

The Govt. is taking steps to ensure Make In India goes on to be a success. But it is a slow and steady process. We live in a country where even consumers who can afford slightly costlier Indian products often settle for a Chinese product available for even 10 percent cheaper. We can consider those people who are on a tight budget, but if those who can afford still cannot make such a small sacrifice don't deserve to complain. We compare our country with South Korea and Japan, but don't have the same commitment as them.

- In my opinion the first problem occurs with accountability of govt to people . If there are land disputes and environmental clearance problem then govt must provide faster compensation and find a way for environmental clearance so that it don't harm our earth as well as grow Indian economy.

Second issue is the kind of economic system we used which is mixed economy.

- I watched your video with interest as the thumb-nail is a click bait one. You have become the mouthpiece of Dr. Raghuram Rajan, the eternal pessimist and a virulent critic of the present government, after he could not get his extension as RBI Governor for the second time. You have compared China's growth with India, as belittling as speed of the goods train. You have selectively cut and pasted the interviews and news items of many of the hallowed persons. I need to answer your slurry. In 70's, USA with her President Nixon and the Aide Henry Kissinger embarked to China who they have considered China as a possible ally to break the hold of USSR from the world order. The MNCs looking for instant profit fell into the trap of Mao Ze Dong and opened their manufacturing bases. In business there is no Capitalism or Communism, only the haves and have-nots. The great Steve Jobs visited India and he chose China over India. Elon Musk started his Tesla in Shanghai with a clear understanding that the technology transfer is for Chinese only. They as usual, stripped his technology and made BYD as the arch rival to Tesla. He has not flown his Space X from China. You are comparing Vietnamese speed of getting the relocated projects from China. The Chinese Barons who run away with their money moved to Vietnam along with their Companies, they hold. Ratan Tata himself had said that when Tata Nano wanted to shift their project from Singur, Bengal to Sanand Gujarat in 2008, the then Chief Minister Modi met him on the land allocated to Nano Project with red carpet. That type of instant decisions are possible, though it cannot be a rule. Make in India may not be grand success as many variables have chipped in after the announcement of that Program. Covid, Slow-down of world economy, Constant bickering at the border with the neighbouring countries exacerbated by anti-Indian activity by the so-called Leftists and Intellectuals to cite a few. Even with all the shortcomings it is taking shape. Even for a totalitarian country like China, it has taken many decades with a lot of help from USA. You can follow the link https://www.pppinindia.gov.in/list_of_all_ppp_projects where as many as 1583 projects with an outlay of nearly Rs.25 lakh crores been invested. Many projects may be under Make in India scheme. India, time immemorial is an Agriculture based economy like China. When the transition came China, due to its stroke of luck became a manufacturing economy. India straightway became a service economy thanks to technological boom in the West and more English-speaking employees available in our Country. Now we are taking a step backward to integrate manufacturing into services with lot of hiccups. Two or three decades is merely a blip in a country's growth. I expect a pat for the development of our country showing the highlights of various achievements. Every goal always be not perfect. Graphs and Histograms do not reveal the true nature of economy. Visit Dholera, Bhadla solar parks and then draw your histograms.

- Stop defaming our country and try to look at the positive things that are happening around.
